FOR THE AUTO TRIP OR GENERAL WEAR

The popularity of serge for top coats, which was noticeable last spring, bids fair to continue this fall, and many of the newest productions are available alike for the auto tour or for general service. For the coat pictured blue serge in a deep hue was selected, silk stitchery in self color with a few buttons and loops providing ornamentation. The design is an unusual one, but effective, the plaited front panel being especially distinctive.

Mass., where Mrs. Mills has been for some weeks, will return to Washington today.

The Governor of Rhode Island and Mrs. R. Livingston Beekman, Mrs. William P. Draper and Mr. and Mrs. Marsden J. Foster were among those who attended the afternoon reception given by G. Howard Hilder at the Art Association Building at Newport.

The reception was arranged in connection with a private view of Mr. Hilder's water colors and recent portraits which are now on exhibition.

In the collection are very striking portraits of Misses Lily and Madeline Liebert, daughters of Gaston Liebert, consul general of France at New York.

The Misses Roth, of Washington, are among the recent arrivals by automobile at Poland Springs, Me.

Among the New Yorkers stopping at the Shoreham are Mr. Pedro Gonzalez, Mr. Roberto Gonzalez, Mr. Archibald Thatcher, Mr. H. L. Richards, Mr. C. D. Cole and Mr. Walter H. Humphrey.

Mr. F. P. McMillen, of Tacoma, Washington, is also stopping at the Shoreham.

THE DAILY ADVENTURES OF PUSS IN BOOTS, Jr.

HEPTIME STORIES.

By DAVID CORY.

Puss Convinces with an Intelligent Gray Donkey.

"Donkey, donkey, old and gray, Open your mouth and blow your horn To wake the world this sleepy morn," called puss Junior, who always remembered his Mother Goose rhymes perfectly. The Donkey paused in his grazing and looked up.

"This sleepy morn," he repeated. "I don't call this a 'sleepy morn.' I should say it was very wide awake."

"I guess it is," admitted Puss. "but, you see, I was only saying a little rhyme from Mother Goose."

"Well, I don't see how it applies to the present situation at all," replied the Donkey in a rather ungracious manner. "The only thing you have right is the donkey part."

"Puss felt rather crestfallen. To be corrected by a Donkey, generally considered one of the stupidest of animals, was not at all to his liking. Puss evidently forgot for the moment that all Mother Goose animals are very intelligent, for otherwise how would they have been celebrated in rhyme? But, like a wise man, he took the rebuke meekly and said nothing."

"Well," said the Donkey after a pause, "can I do anything else for you, Sir Cat?" Granting that it is too late to wake the morn there may still be other requests with which I will gladly comply."

"Which is the shorter road across Mother Goose Land?" inquired Puss.

"I don't know the exact number of miles," replied the Donkey thoughtfully, "but the road to your left is the shorter. The one to your right leads to the seashore. Gingerbread Bridge is at the end."

"What!" exclaimed Puss Junior. "Why, you don't say so?"

"What do you know about Gingerbread Bridge?" asked the Donkey.

"I crossed it once, and not so very long ago either," replied Puss.

"Then you certainly don't want to take the Gingerbread Road," replied the Donkey. "So it is not hard to choose which way to go."

"Thank you," said Puss, turning his horse's head down the road to the left. "I will take the left road because it is the right road."

"Ha, ha," brayed the Donkey, "that's a good joke for a cat! May you have a pleasant journey!"

"Lift your ears and blow your horn, the sheep's in the meadow, the cows' in the corn!" cried Puss gayly, "although the morn is awake I fear Boy Blue is still asleep."

And with these words our small hero cantered down the road and out of sight. (Copyright, 1916.)

Prize Money for Sinking Ships. London, Aug. 22.—In the prize court today Admiral Sturdee made application for prize money for sinking the German warships Scharnhorst, Gneisenau, Leipzig and Humberg, in the Falkland Islands battle. The amount of prize money asked is $20,800. After brief consideration the court granted Admiral Sturdee's petition.

All Music Is Perfectly Played by the Victrola

Think of the pleasure of having the "world of music" ready for you at any time you choose to make use of it—the Victrola does this, and plays every record with the beauty of the artist that created it.

You can have a dance any time and the music will be perfectly timed and have the rhythm and "turn" that distinguishes dance music of quality. If you like the martial airs of the Marine or Sousa's Band; the soft, plaint and exquisite tones of Kreisler's violin; the wonderfully clear and sympathetic voice of McCormack; the purity, power and refinement of Caruso's singing which has conferred upon him the title of the greatest of all tenors; these and thousands of other artists may be heard in all their greatness on the Victrola.

The Victrola reproduces the music of the recordings perfectly, obtaining the full beauty of the composition and preserves the true tone values and the shadings of expression as no other talking machine can.

We have an ample stock of Victrolas and Records at all times.

Prices of Victrolas

Portable Victrolas in oak at $15.00 and $25.00; and oak and mahogany at $50.00, and the Cabinet-style Victrolas in various sizes and designs from $75.00 to $300.00.

Our Easy Terms of Selling Victrolas

We make a very liberal offer for you to have a Victrola in your home—If you select and pay for a few records, the instrument will be delivered without initial payment until thirty days later.

PERSONALITIES I HAVE MET. HENRY MILLER.

Copyright, 1916, by The McClure Newspaper Syndicate. Entered at Stationers Hall, London. All rights reserved, including rights of translation. Publication of this article in whole or in part is expressly prohibited except by special arrangement with The McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

FROM all over the country the moving-picture fans who had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Miller on the stage are wondering why he does not appear in pictures. And the moving-picture fans who have not had the joy of beholding some of Mr. Miller's superb performances are clamoring to see him on the screen and wondering why—as most of the famous stage stars have been photographed—he does not step before the camera.

I know of one little reason which I can whisper to you all—it is because Mr. Miller is not conceited enough even to appreciate his own good looks upon the screen.

It happened out in California, and here is how we discovered it: Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dillingham and Mr. Henry Miller came out to the Famous Players' studio one afternoon and were very much amused at the taking of a scene from "Rags." Mr. Miller was so interested he had to have everything explained to him, from the arrangement of the sets to the operation of the camera.

"Come in here, Mr. Miller," I implored him, "and have your picture taken—just for fun—to see yourself upon the screen."

At first he thought I had said it in jest, but after the whole company had argued, persuaded, and even threatened, Mr. Miller determined that after all it would be quite a jolly bit of an experience.

"Come on in here and play my screen father's part," I asked him, waving my hand at the bar-room set. "But you will have to be a pretty rough character if you want to be the dad of a girl who goes barefooted and wears overalls."

"What?" I saw him looking from me to the set.

"Oh, dear," Mr. Miller protested, "I can't get used to this impromptu acting and I don't think it would be quite fair to suddenly shower me with such a blessing as being the father—even by proxy—of a moving-picture star! I would much rather have you try to fit me into the play I am appearing in at present and be little orphan, overalls Annie, saying farewell to me, her guardian, when she leaves for school."

Only the night before I had seen Mr. Miller in "Daddy Long Legs," and I remembered the scene he was speaking of. It was a whimsical, pathetic bit of acting, just as difficult for me, who was by then bubbling over with comedy, as it would have been for Mr. Miller to have stepped into the character of our picture. But I was so delighted that he was going to enter into the spirit of it that I hushed my lips and made no protest. It was great fun teaching this star how to put on a screen makeup, and how we all enjoyed the hour following—during the taking of the scene.

A few days later, Mr. Miller, eager as the schoolboy who has been to the photographer's for the first time, came out to the studio and was ushered into the projecting room to see the running of the film in which he appeared. At the first sight of him we all sent up a complimentary cheer, but not a peep from Mr. Miller until the film had run its course. Then he sat back—dismayed.

"Don't tell me," he said dejectedly, "that I look anything like that!"

"Like what?" we asked.

"Like the man on the film the public would be introduced to as Henry Miller."

"Why, of course you do!" Then we all laughed at his look of dismay. "You have no idea how well you photographed!"

"If that's photographing well, my career as a moving-picture star will die right here in this projecting room. I should never have the courage to inflict such a hopeless face upon the public."

But here Mr. Miller was wrong, although we could not argue him out of it, for really he is very handsome, and not a bit disappointing when you see him in the moving pictures. But some day one of the producing companies will persuade him that to appear upon the screen is to live forever and to find new friends among the public's millions.

Mr. Miller for years has been one of the most beloved figures on the stage, and how many tears have been shed—oh, buckets and buckets!—when Henry Miller mounted the scaffold in the last act of "The Tale of Two Cities."

"The Great Divide" was one of his later successes, and in reply to a letter written in to me the other day asking if I knew whether Henry Miller would appear in pictures in "The Great Divide," I must answer that it has already been done in pictures, starring Ethel Clayton and House Peters.

Answers to Correspondents.

Mrs. E. T.—Tell your little Marion that Jack did not really cut off the curls—that I would have been just as heartbroken as she if the scissors had snipped the long locks. Her mother has taken care of all these years.

M. R. S.—I shall read the book you recommend so highly, which you think will make a splendid photoplay, and thank you for the suggestion.

Mrs. L. D.—I would take your daughter to a theatrical agency, if I were you, as it is very difficult to see the managers until she has had some experience, and the agencies can put you in touch with theatrical producing companies.

SUMMER SEASON ENDS AT CAMP GOOD WILL

Jubilant "Kiddies" and Mothers Return to City—Baby Hospital Camp Remains Open.

Camp Good Will is no more. By 10 o'clock yesterday, all who have had several weeks of sunshine and fresh air there were back in their city homes. After having yesterday the last meal at the camp, load after load of young stars and mothers left for the city.

In the afternoon tents were struck, and by nightfall the camp site was bare and deserted, with everything packed up until next summer.

More than 1,000 mothers and children have been to Camp Good Will, and Camp Pleasant, which also closed yesterday. Different organizations and many visitors aided the camps during the summer. The Kallikis Grotto, the Navy Yard men, the Builders' and Manufacturers' Exchange and the Soldiers' Home have given the children parties.

Four parties were accompanied for two weeks this summer. The Baby Hospital Camp will remain open until late fall.

The staff at Camp Good Will this summer has been Miss Margaret Simpson, superintendent, assisted by Misses Elizabeth Callison and Bessie Lineback, who had charge of the girls, and Carlton Taylor and Stephen Baldwin, who had the boys in charge. Volunteer workers for the past two weeks have been Misses Schifman, Dorothy Jacobs, and Elsie Kneaster. Dr. Berry, of Brightwood, has assisted with the boys, and Miss Alma Barker, a member of the Girl Scouts, helped with the younger ones.

TWILIGHT SLEEP UPHELD

Prominent Physicians Take Opposite Sides in Medical Controversy—Johns Hopkins Condemns Method.

Special to The Washington Herald.

New York, Aug. 23.—Is twilight sleep a failure? Does the stamp of disapproval recently set upon the so-called painless method of childbirth by the Johns Hopkins Hospital, after tests extending over a long period, forecast the end of what a few years ago was enthusiastically greeted as the great step in the emancipation of suffering motherhood?

"By no means," say several prominent physicians who are still using the "dammers," that is, twilight sleep, with encouraging results.

"Twilight sleep has failed," say other physicians equally prominent and as highly esteemed. "The action of Johns Hopkins with its high medical prestige is simply a condemnation of a similar decision arrived at by many New York hospitals more than a year ago in abolishing the twilight sleep treatment."

The action of Johns Hopkins, long regarded as one of the country's authoritative interpreters of medical questions, has aroused a new discussion as to the desirability of using the twilight sleep treatment.

A position where she is given a small part very quickly.
